The following things contribute to world hunger: poverty, armed conflict, over-consumption, rapid population, discrimination, and powerlessness. Poverty is when people do not have the resources needed to grow or buy food, while over-consumption is when those who do abuse it. War disrupts agricultural production and causes governments to spend money on arms instead of social programs. When population spikes, natural resources are strained in poor nations and it is harder for everyone to find the means to feed themselves. A lack of access to education, employment, and often stems from racial, gender, or ethnic discrimination. And this all leads to an overall inability to receive food. It is us, the people of strong nations with long hunger rates that hold the power. We have the power to stop others from going hungry, we only have to help. Bring in food!
